COLUMBIA UNIVERSITY

To Helen R. Downes

You have guided us toward an understanding of scientific methods and attitudes, and instilled in us a deep respect for them.

You have encouraged us to apply these methods to all phases of our education; in this way we may see for ourselves how the creative process operates in widening man's scope.

In appreciation, we dedicate this book to you.

Foreword

It is traditional for those of us who are graduating seniors to take that last, long look backward to appraise the influence college has had upon our lives. We inevitably find that we are heavily in debt to our wise, inspirational teachers. We are deeply grateful to them for many things, particularly for the understanding and appreciation they impart to us of the creative process. This gives us added insights to the world of today and prepares us to make our own contributions to modern living.

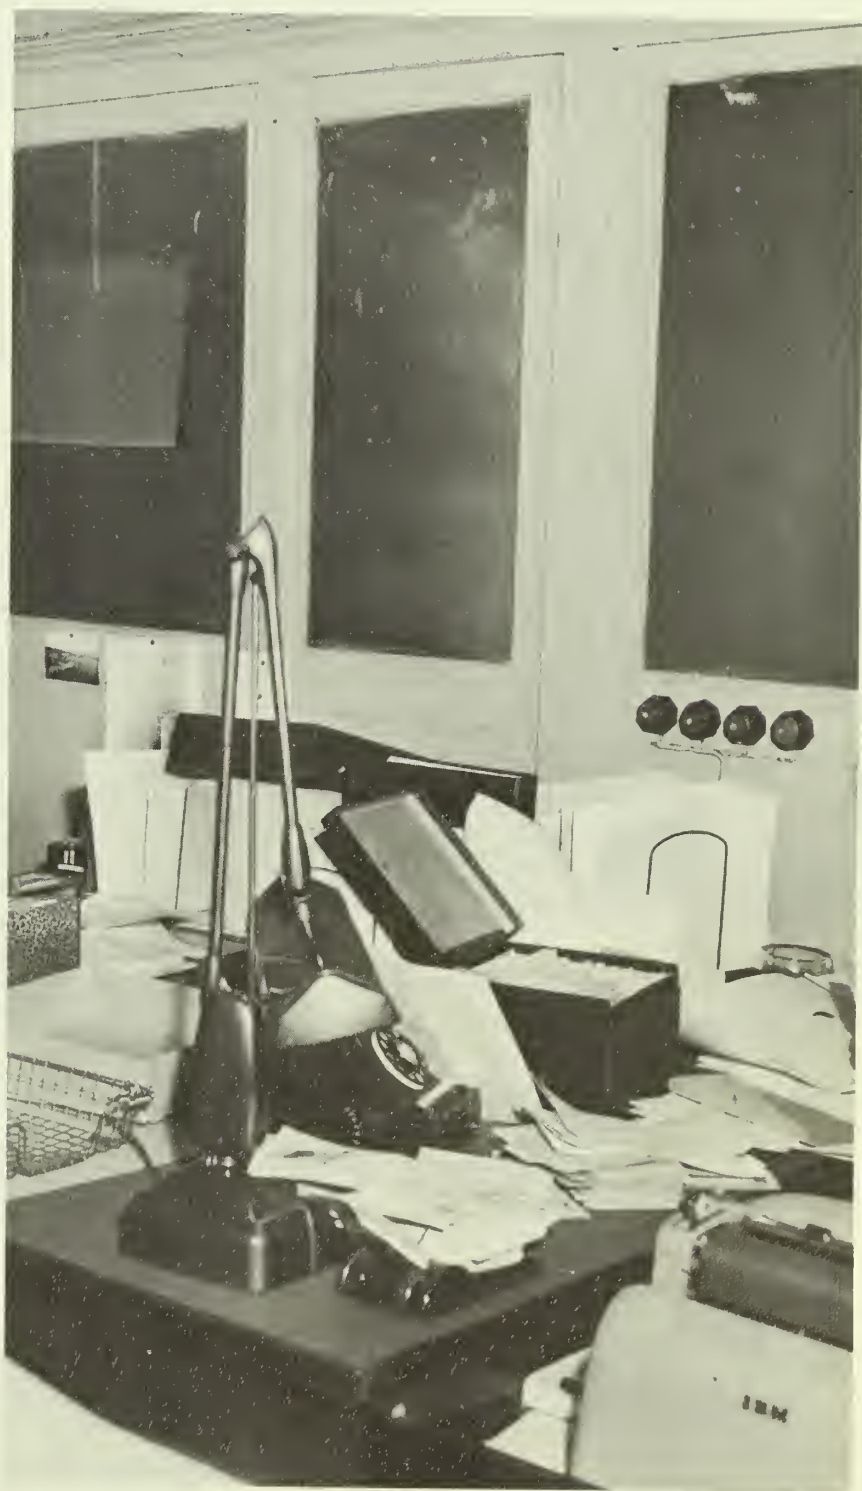

We know that the acquisition of facts is only the first step in the education of an individual. Most of us pass through a period of inner confusion when we question what we have learned. Eventually, we come to think in the terms of the theories we previously questioned. Then we are again ready to increase and enhance our factual knowledge. And so the spiral goes on and on. Somewhere along the way, some of us may perceive a disunity in the web of theories in our own field of interest. This sudden perception may be the beginning of what can truly be called a creation.

In the following pages we want to show how this creative process operates in furthering scientific knowledge as well as in deepening our perceptions in the areas of study we call the Humanities and the Social Sciences. Barnard College becomes our laboratory for four years. Our campus, the neighborhood and the teachers around us act as catalysts to stimulate the exchange and development of ideas among the students. From these ideas can come our small, but, perhaps, significant contribution.

To our way of thinking, Barnard is and should always be a liberal arts college. The spirit of the Humanities should permeate every part of the campus. There should be a concerted effort to explore each area of study in relation to the total body of knowledge. Barnard offers a wide range of opportunities to any student who wants to share in this fascinating process of exploration. The curriculum is designed to offer everyone a grounding in 'Humanities' in view of its important role.

The Humanities must try to give us the rationale for all we do and attempt to do. It is in this respect that they are essentially creative. It can also be fairly stated that all the disciplines included within this title are basically interpretive. This is true of even the more actively productive endeavors, painting and literary composition, for example, since they present only selected features of the world. The artist interprets as he discriminates between the more and less important. Those seemingly non-creative pursuits, criticism and analysis, help explain and give coherence to the whole range of experience by the process of refining and unifying.

Our civilization has advanced to the stage where we have realized the importance of interpretation. That we come to appreciate the interpretive process, its manifestations and its goal, is likewise a matter of great urgency.

Even a humanities major can't look too kindly at the world at nine o'clock in the morning — — —

in spite of the advantages of an off-campus apartment.

Bare-legged girl, and what cheek! Or is it that even the best of us is not immune to temptation? Fine Arts classes, however, are not the sole beneficiaries of Minor Latham Playhouse's soft seats and softer illumination; almost any morning hour finds a capacity audience (well, occasionally) attending an upper Broadway presentation of Shakespeare, or a screening of the "life cycle of the Platyhelminthes"

An off-campus resident is likely to have divided loyalties, but she can have the best of both worlds; today it's Hewitt for lunch, but tomorrow, the James Room, perhaps.

She didn't know I was sitting there.

A short walk is also welcome after lunch, and it just might turn out to be helpful,

THE SOLOMON R. GUGGENHEIM MUSEUM

A Scientist, not a writer born
Has an eye for essential data
Thus, this piece is written in outline form
To get to the heart of the matter.

I The Arts and Science are closely related

- A. The writer's words, the sculptor's chisel
The painter's oils, the playwright's acts
Are used as the scientist does facts.
  - 1. All are tools to achieve a goal.
  - 2. An aesthetically pleasing, unified whole.
- B. A book, a statue, a guided missile.
  - 1. Each is different, yet each the same
Parts of Man's unquenchable flame
  - 2. The eternal search for truth and for knowledge
In garrets, or chem labs at Barnard College,

II Aesthetics in Science should be more highly rated.

- A. There is beauty with infinite variations
  - 1. Wonders are constantly being unfurled
  - 2. As part of the scientist's daily world.
- B. Stars in incredibly huge constellations
  - 1. The symmetrical balance of natural plan
  - 2. The intricacies in the body of man.
  - 3. That substance consists mostly of empty space.
  - 4. That every new fact has its own unique place.
- C. Not all scientists see these implications.
  - 1. A rainbow elicits poetic reaction
But scientists know that it's merely diffraction.
For some explanations destroy all the awe,
But the so simple reason makes some wonder more.
  - 2. Surrounded by beauty, most men remain blind,
And scientists are just like the rest of Mankind.
  - 3. But those for whom facts enhance appreciation
Are those who achieve scientific creation.
  - 4. When speaking of writers, it's the creative we mention.
Thus the creative in science attract our attention.

III What makes creativity? A tentative solution.

(Illustrated by Darwin, and Evolution.)

- A. A vast store of facts to be used with facility
  - 1. To formulate any valid postulation
Of various fields, one must have information.
  - 2. Darwin, a master of natural history
Used his knowledge to solve evolution's mystery.
- B. Interrelations must be found with agility.
  - 1. Many branches of knowledge must be correlated
Or one has deducted, not really created.
  - 2. All Darwin's facts led him to nought
But, with Malthus' theories, he found what he sought.
- C. A creator must have intuitive ability.
  - 1. Of course, facts cannot be combined willy nilly
Or they may lead to theories which are actually silly.
  - 2. The creative mind needs a good share of intuition
To see quickly which combinations will reach fruition.
- D. The courage to face the public's hostility
  - 1. Tenaciously clinging to established ideas
People fight any changes with anger and jeers.
  - 2. Darwin and Huxley withstood all attacks
Bravely they battled, armed only with facts.
- E. Luck is the difference between success and futility
  - 1. In Malthus' book, Darwin found the key to his query
If by chance, he'd not read it, he'd not have had any theory.
  - 2. But, if one just trusts in chance, one will find
As Pasteur said, "Luck comes to the well-prepared mind."

Good Morning . . .

"I think I'd better get started on the reading!"

"Oh! So that's what he's talking about!"

The fourth floor of Milbank Hall is the scientific world in miniature, with its great variety of ideas and methods.

In the afternoon of almost any weekday,
students and teachers can be seen working points of their subjects.

Marcia Goldberg is a history major on the run. She has become well acquainted with moonlit libraries and deserted study halls. She has lurked for hours in silent, imposing book stacks at constant and interminable research. Her senior year was a whirlwind of helter-scelter activity—a quick lunch with a Columbia boyfriend, a hurried conference with a classmate, and always digging digging, research research. Marcia Goldberg was writing a senior thesis that required her to isolate herself for five months in a world of book stacks and reference rooms. The thesis was due on the eighteenth of March and the days were too short by Christmas. Marcia flew through the days with not a moment to spare. Her last year at Barnard was a bolt of lightning that flashed by with blinding speed. She'll remember it.

What follows is a picture story of Marcia Goldberg on the run. And the pictures were taken on the run. They had to be. There wasn't much time.

I never thought we'd get together.

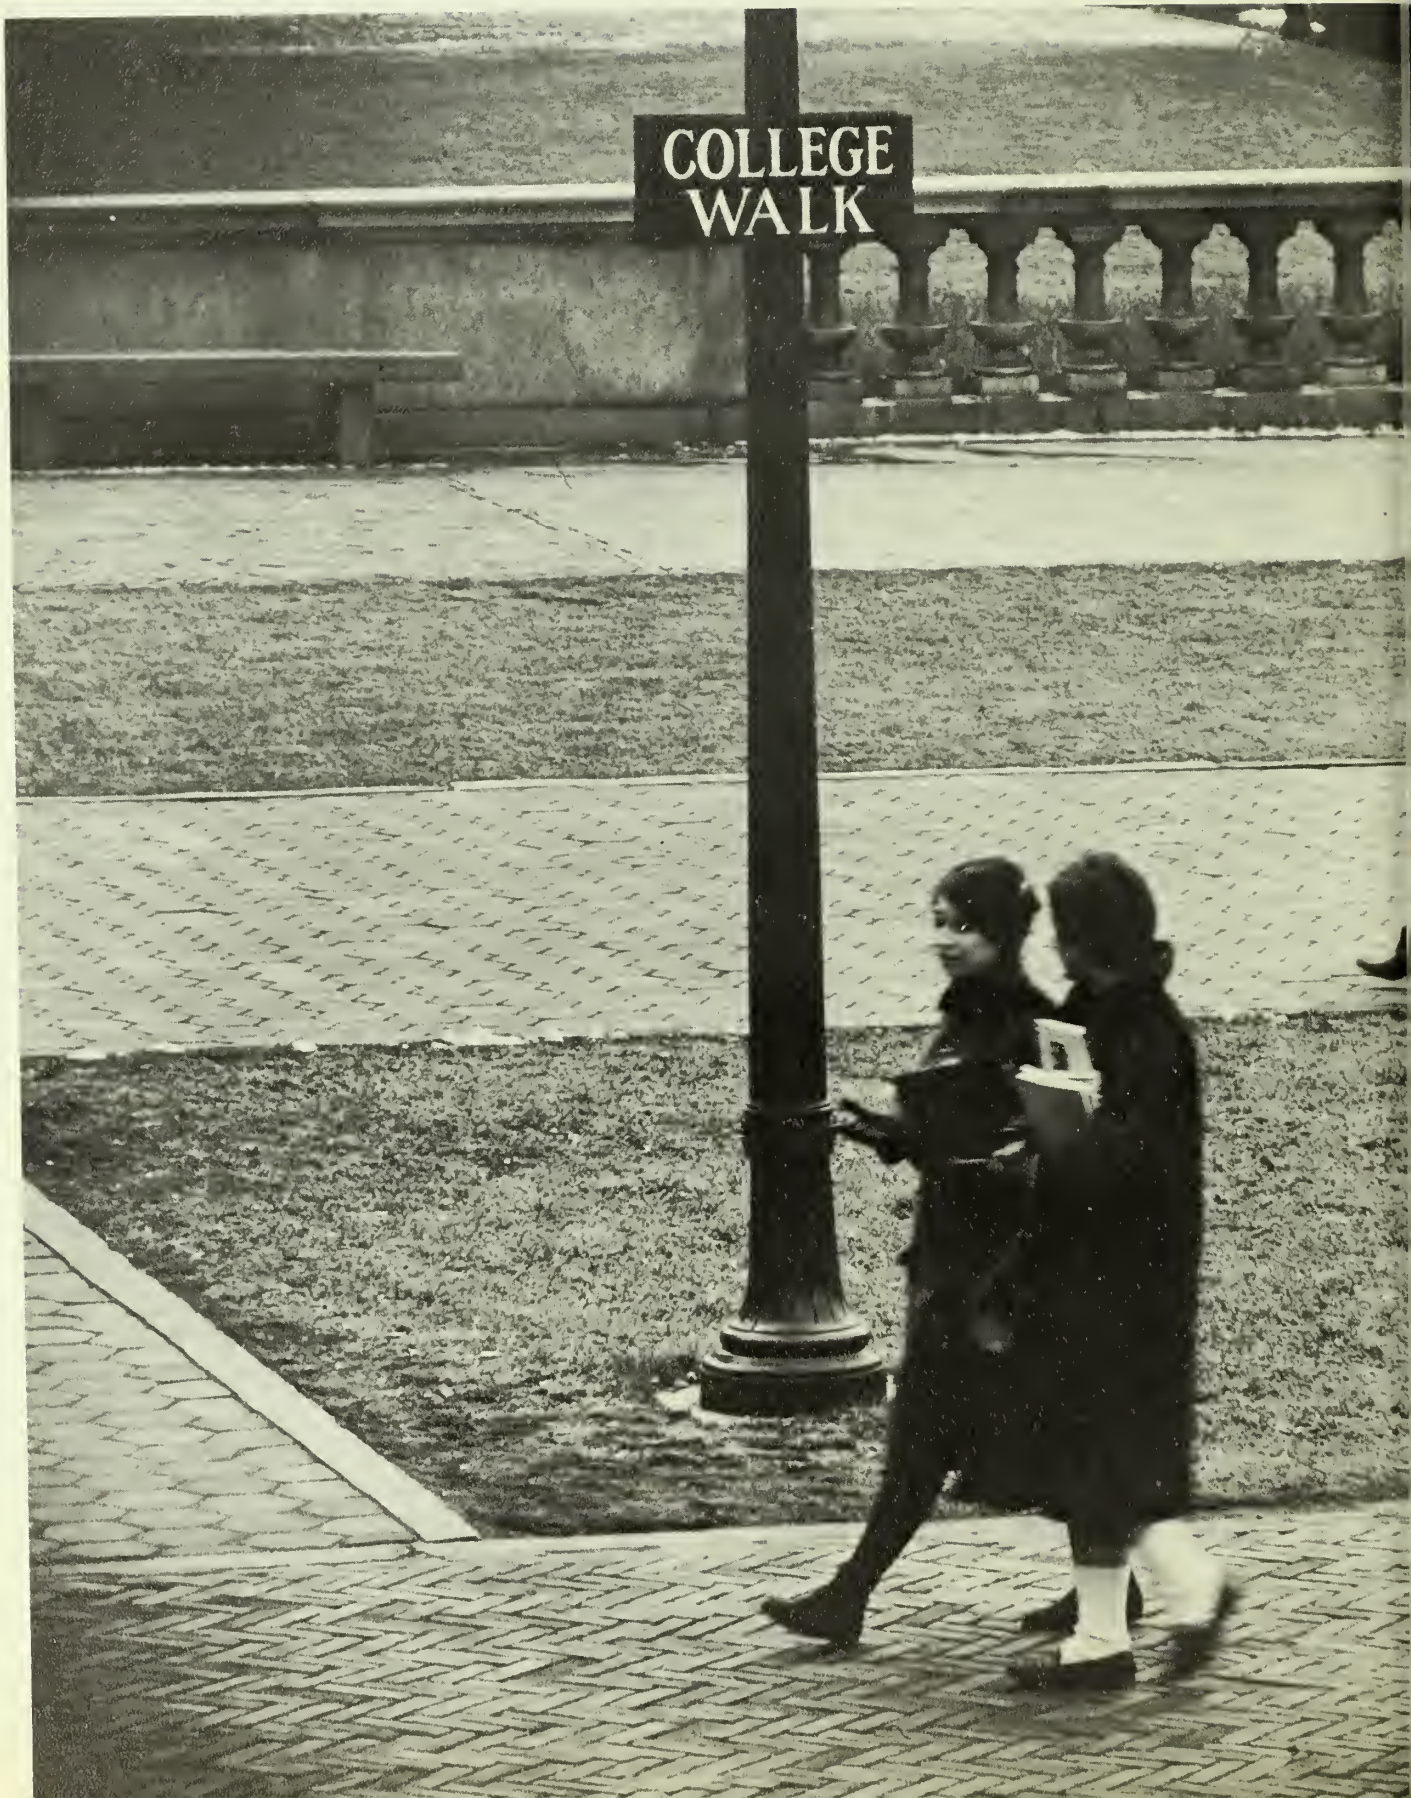

Where can we get a quick bite?

Just what is his status with you?

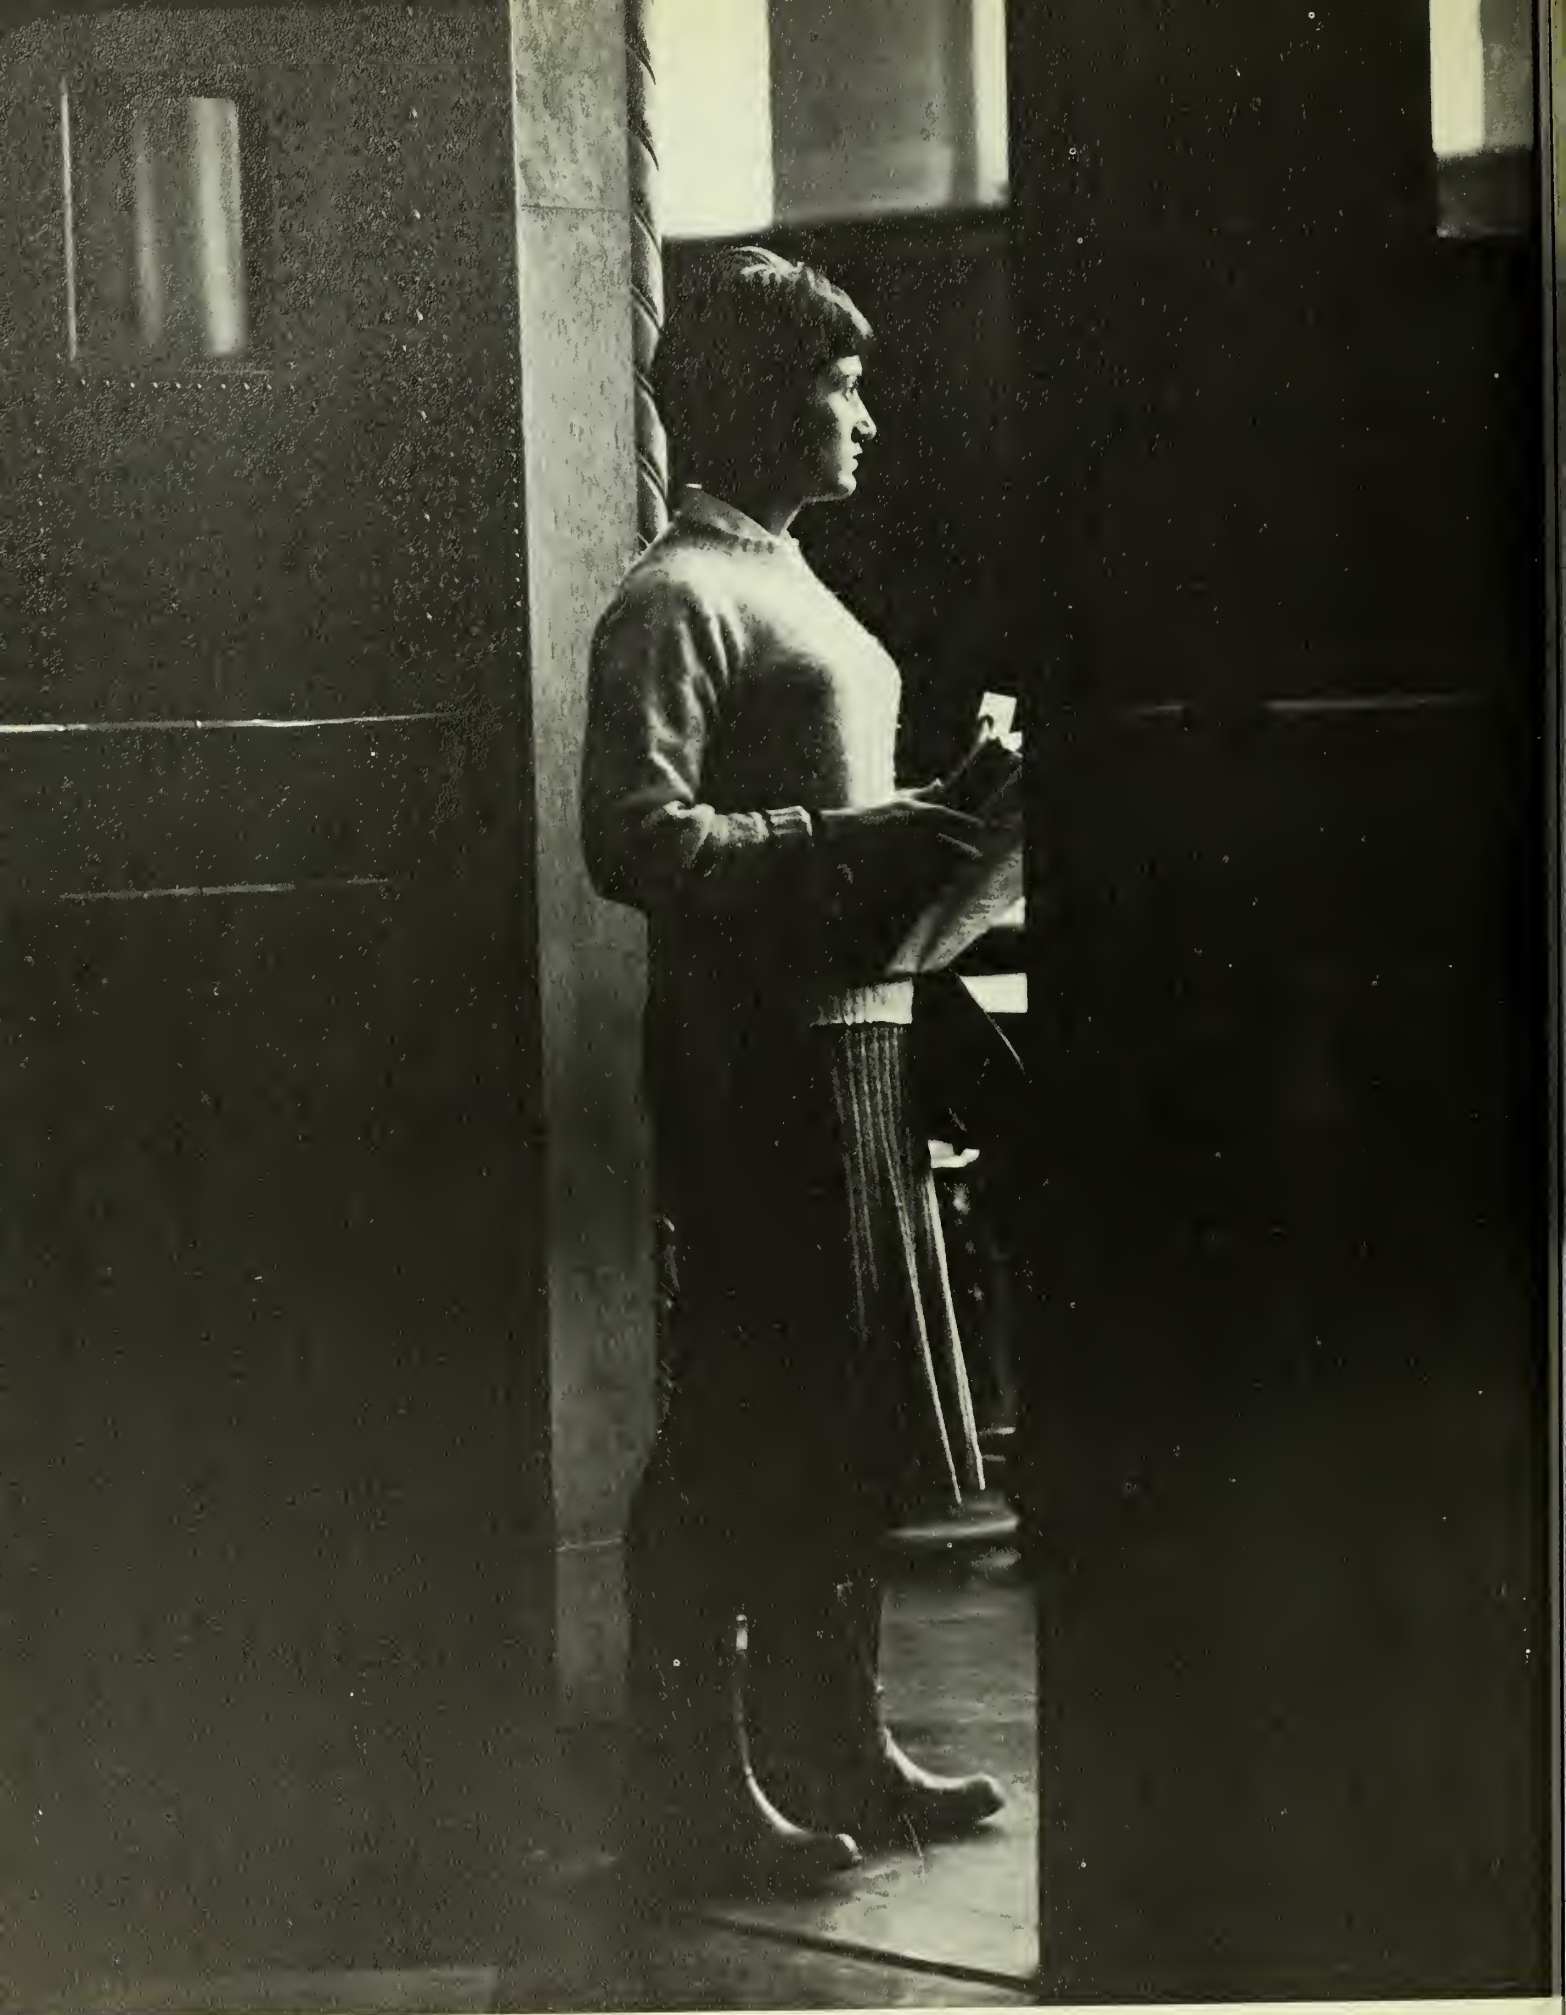

Cherry pie even looks fattening.

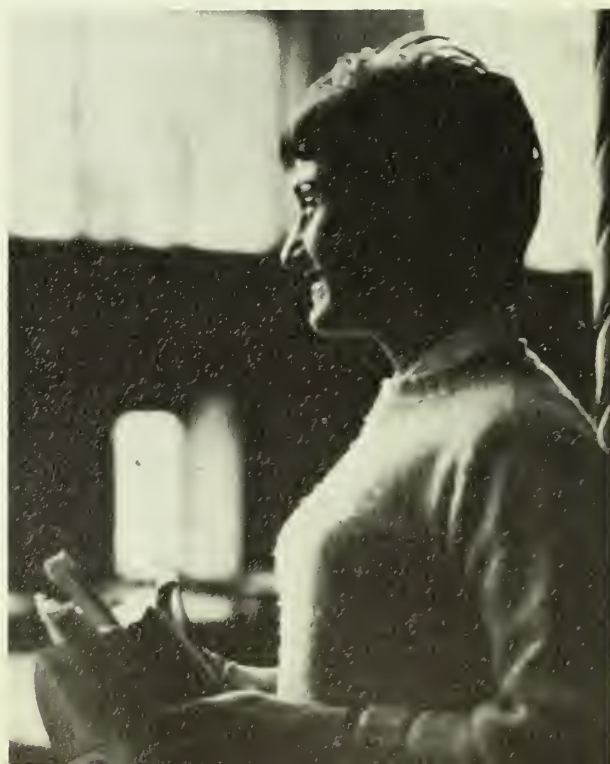

In the Columbia Library:

I don't know what television is.

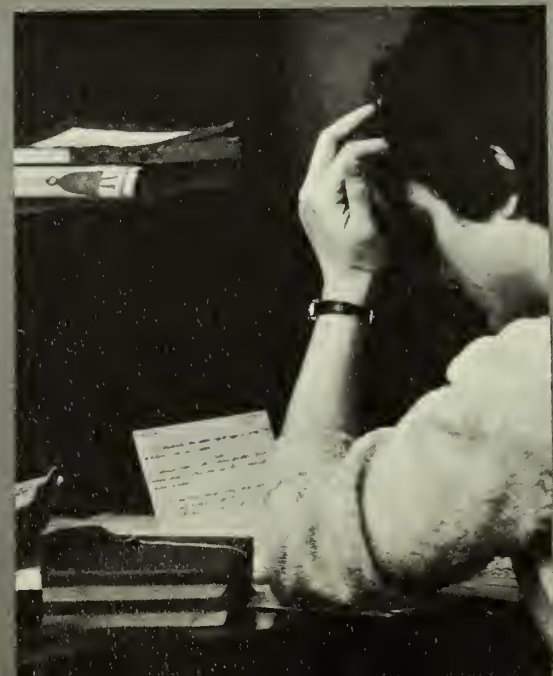

This looks dull.

I hope I'll have enough index cards.

I wish it were dinner time.

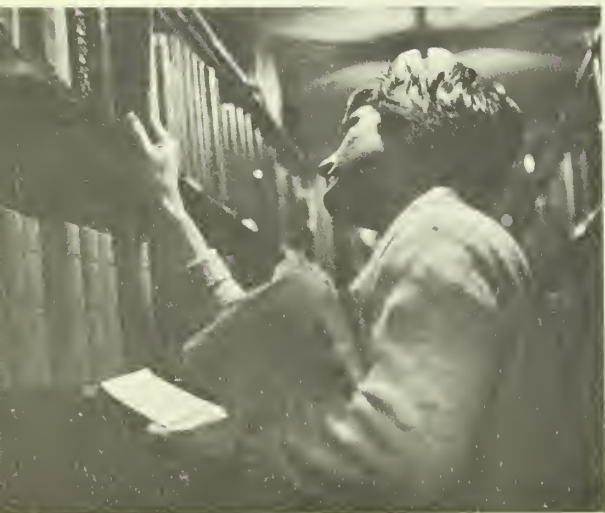

I just can't see straight anymore.

They always put things I need on the top shelf.

After finals I have so many people to write.

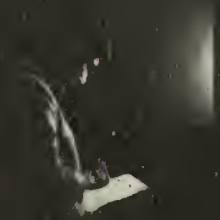

It's hard studying at home 'cause I waste
so much time talking on the phone and eating.

I'll never get to bed tonight.

After College? I know it sounds crazy but I'll either go to Europe or go into retail merchandising.
